

Matthew Keeler currently serves as a Lead Probation and Parole Officer for the Idaho Department of Correction, specializing in the management of sex offender caseloads. With over two decades of experience in law enforcement and correctional supervision, Matthew has gained a broad understanding of both operational leadership and clinical rehabilitation practices.

His supervision style is grounded in therapeutic settings, where he worked as a Clinical Supervisor in the Sex Offender Treatment Program (SOTP) for the Washington Department of Corrections. This experience laid the foundation for a career devoted to the responsible supervision, treatment, and risk management of sexual offenders in both institutional and community environments.

Matthew holds a Bachelor of Science in Psychology and has completed advanced trainings in Cognitive Behavioral Treatment (CBT), Interrogation and Interview strategies, and Behavioral Risk assessments. His operational background includes: Hostage Negotiator, Prison Rape Investigator (PREA), Realistic De-escalation Trainer/Instructor and POST certified Instructor. He currently serves as a Field Training Officer, mentoring and preparing new officers entering the correctional field.

Recognized by the Idaho Department of Correction as a Subject Matter Expert (SME) in sex offender supervision and management, Matthew has played a key role in statewide policy review initiatives and the development of evidence-based training programs. He is the Co-founder of SOMTAC Consulting, a training and consulting firm committed to advancing supervision practices for high-risk offender populations.

Matthew brings a grounded, practitioner-focused approach to training, emphasizing the integration of clinical insight with tactical field strategies to promote safer communities and more effective offender management outcomes.
